1984 (George Orwell)

1984 is the only novel that made me “jump” at a certain point. Big government and a surveillance culture should be feared. Though written in 1949, Orwell’s classic was eerily prophetic in describing some of the technology that we take for granted today.

Blood Feud: The Clintons vs. The Obamas; Unlikeable: The Problem with Hillary; Guilty as Sin; The Truth About Hillary (Ed Klein)

He is probably the best political writer of the 2000s. His books are captivating and he has amazing access to sources.

Christianity and Liberalism (J. Gresham Machen)

This is a terrific defense of Christian orthodoxy. Machen argues that liberal Christianity is not just a version of Christianity but is a completely

Disciplines of a Godly Man (Kent Hughes)

I read this book shortly after getting married and becoming a father as part of a men’s discipleship group at church. It’s probably one of the best books on what it means to be a Christian man.

The Godfather (Mario Puzo)

This was one of my favorite movies and yes, the book is better than the movie!

Illiberal Education (Dinesh D’Souza)

I read this book my freshman year in college and it was instrumental in giving me confidence to be more vocal in class about challenging the liberal dogma passed off as facts by the professors and fellow students.

A Matter of Interpretation (Antonin Scalia)

How should the US Constitution be interpreted? Is it a “living, breathing document” that can be changed by the will of nine unelected judges or is it a document that is bound by the words on the page and the meaning those words had at the time of its enactment?

Slouching Towards Gomorrah: Modern Liberalism and American Decline (Robert Bork)

A great book written by Judge Robert Bork about the state of the country at the end of the 1990s. Much of what he has discussed has sadly come to pass in the last 20 years.
